KAZIRANGA NATIONAL PARK
3 NIGHTS / 4 DAYS

Stretching across the floodplains of the Brahmaputra in Assam, Kaziranga is a landscape shaped by vast grasslands, wetlands, forests and seasonal rivers. Famous for its iconic One-Horned Rhinoceros, the park supports an extraordinary range of wildlife, including wild elephants, tigers, wild water buffalo and swamp deer. Exploring Kaziranga on safari is less about knowing what you will see and more about being present in a landscape where every turn can reveal something unexpected.

Weather

Winter (November–February): Winter is one of the most comfortable periods to explore Kaziranga, with cool mornings, pleasant daytime temperatures and occasional mist over the grasslands and wetlands. Temperatures generally range from around 10°C to 25°C. The dry landscape and comfortable weather make this a rewarding season for wildlife safaris, birdwatching and photography. Migratory birds are also present during this period, adding to the park's rich birdlife. Early morning safaris can be chilly, so carry warm layers such as a fleece jacket, sweater, light down jacket and scarf.
Summer (March–May): Summer gradually becomes hot and humid, with temperatures often reaching 30°C–35°C or higher during the day. As the grasslands dry and water becomes more concentrated in ponds and wetlands, wildlife activity can become easier to observe in certain areas, particularly during the cooler hours of the morning. Safaris can be warm and dusty, so wear light, breathable clothing, and carry a wide-brimmed hat, sunglasses, sunscreen and sufficient drinking water. Early morning safaris are generally more comfortable than those later in the day.

Best Season for Wildlife

November to April is ideal for exploring Kaziranga National Park, offering excellent opportunities to spot one-horned rhinoceroses, elephants, wild water buffaloes and tigers.
December to February is particularly rewarding for wildlife safaris and birdwatching.
